

Stories of PEACE & MODERATION

During their visit, Saga and her parents
talk about their problem
she doesn't have Peace

Stories of Peace & Moderation is a collaborative project of the Raoul Wallenberg School in Bromma, Sweden, The Embassy of the United States in Stockholm and Stories for Society, a Stockholm-based non-profit which works with storytelling as a tool for learning and communication, www.storiesforsociety.com.

talk about
sort her so that
her parents.

I've
no

ly.
a dream
up. But if
wanted to sleep.
just getting along.

Four stories were produced by children and youth in classes 6-9 during two 3-hour workshops, in which they worked in groups to express their stories of what happens when a visitor comes to their imaginary islands, where they wish for peace to reign. The participants have been responsible for forming and expressing their stories themselves. Class 6 has told their story in Swedish language and the other classes have told their story in English language. All images and texts are created by the participants.

After eating
that he can su

The workshops were undertaken in connection with a ceremony held at the American Ambassador's Residence on September 11, 2011 commemorating all victims of terrorism and extremist violence.

t the key.
native thoughts.

Peace is having fun.
Melissa runs up to the house of music and starts to play the saxophone. The evil poacher hates their peaceful music and dives into the water.
Knowledge is very important for reaching peace and preventing war.

Mary and Nana introduce Saga to all the people who live on the island, and very soon Saga has lots of friends and is very happy.

Treat each other well.

Berättelser för samhället
STORIES FOR SOCIETY
LEARNING AND COMMUNICATING
THROUGH STORY-TELLING

At Stories for Society we believe in the transformational power of story-telling. It is through our stories that we can make what seems impossible possible and create a new reality. We can create peace, live sustainably and end poverty using the force of our mutual imagination and faith within the realms of our stories.

We believe that storytelling is a skill essential to learning and communication in the 21st century, and that all persons should have the chance to hone that skill. To this end, we offer training and facilitate story-telling processes in schools and other organizations. Stories for Society is a non-profit organization based in Stockholm.

For further information:

www.storiesforsociety.com

or contact julie.lindahl@storiesforsociety.com

070-661 00 15.